boarding schools mostly uses English as an effort to answer the challenges of the times. English Language Teaching (ELT) is believed to be a language that must be mastered, as it is an international language used by most nations worldwide. Boarding schools have incorporated English in addition, other secular sciences and technology into their curriculum, encouraging students to acquire academic and general knowledge such as English.

This study identified two major themes associated with the challenges and strategies of teaching English: internal factors such as pedagogy, motivation, and identity, and external factors such as curriculum, classroom administration, and instructors' proficiency. Converting academic message to all levels of world society is essential for students to excel in English learning. The most critical details in this text are the challenges English teachers face in their experiences, such as the lack of exposure to English and the lack of knowledge about the culture of other countries. These challenges require high dedication from a teacher and a student's willingness to learn. To do this, they must provide fun and meaningful learning, free students to explore existing material, provide corrections in students' use of language, involve students to find out the mistakes they make themselves, increase students' interest in learning English, provide new things such as knowledge about the culture of other countries, and motivate students about the importance of learning English.
